

The Thessaloniki Call to European Youth:

Create Work – Do It Yourself

Thessaloniki, 14 March 2014

You are young in body and heart and you are educated. You live in Greece, Italy, Portugal or Spain, and you are without a good job - or simply any job. Or you are still studying but have little chance to get a job after you have completed your studies. You see the time and the talent of your generation wasted and you consider the only option that is left for you: to leave your country and look for a job in another country.

Imagine a different future for you:

- Where you can stay in your country and get a good, paid job which builds on your talents and supports you in further developing them;
- Where you and your friends become part of a European team of young people who are doing something good for you, your country and Europe, that nobody has ever done before;
- Where you can be an employee, co-owner and part of the management of the company you work for, and have the opportunity to work with and learn from experienced senior citizens from other European countries;
- Where your work helps to re-unite people in Europe and different generations, in the atmosphere of creation, fun and mutual benefits.

Utopia, you may think. Reality within reach, we say.

We, young people from Greece and Portugal, with the Intercivil Society (London) and its partners are inviting you to make this different future your very own reality, to be part and co-owner of the ProWork initiative. ProWork is young Europeans' solidarity across generations for work creation.

Visit us online to see what ProWork is and how you can get involved.
Contact us if you are interested, through:

www.intercivil.net

